The modern world has grown quite comfortable with the Internet of things. A myriad of daily routines like ordering meals at restaurants, tracking down the nearest business using a car or smartphone as their GPS, and monitoring your fitness as it runs through your daily activities are made easier with the application for you to enjoy. What is Airdroid? Based in the Netherlands, Airdroid is an application that lets you connect to your smartphone or tablet through your WiFi network to access your files stored remotely. This way, you don't have to worry about losing the files located on your device even if it were to get stolen or damaged. All you have to do is connect to your network, select your account from the application, and it'll let you access your files remotely. Connecting to your device remotely What makes this interesting is that you can connect to your smartphone or tablet running on Android Marshmallow or older operating systems as well as desktop PCs and Macs running on Windows 10, 8 or 7. Once connected, a small window comes up that displays all the contents of the selected device. Its search bar can be used to filter through categories and items, but you can also search through your own pictures, videos, folders, apps, e-mails, and SMS messages. You can even assign specific devices to specific folders or transfer them to other devices easily. Other Features of Airdroid Airdroid is a versatile application, and the developer also provides other features to help you. What makes it special is that it runs independently of the application installed on the device, meaning you don't need the phone or tablet to be connected to the internet, unlike some of the other applications. This way, you don't need to worry about any failure with the network because it's on a different layer. You can share files between your desktop and your smartphone easily as well. The application can send remote notifications to your smartphone, but you can also limit its usage. Saving the files locally Airdroid is a cost-effective application that lets you save the files you access remotely to your cloud storage. You don't have to worry about lost files or data you access remotely. The
